(Ishikawa, Hiroshi) [1551] 2.1 oz of pure honey is made by applying a little white sugar to a glass of water and stirring it with a spatula. It is boiled for about 15 minutes. The honey is extracted by means of centrifugation on the same metal disc until they reach the point where the honey is broken into small pieces. It is transferred to the dry sugar for further extraction. The whole honey is left at room temperature. Dried fresh honey is usually transferred into small bottle to use.
